ART BASEL MIAMI BEACH

CJG is delighted to present a solo booth presentation by Los Angeles based artist Patrick Martinez.

For our ABMB presentation, Patrick Martinez has created a new installation of neon works on the main wall of the booth, addressing recent sociopolitical developments here in the US including the Supreme Court ruling on Roe vs. Wade. Patrick's neon on Plexiglas pieces are fabricated in exactly the same manner as typical street level neon signage. Patrick's neon forms are mounted to sheets of Plexiglas with transformers installed on a curved lip of Plexiglas at the top. Patrick uses words from oratorical sources, song lyrics, or of his own invention to respond to contemporary cultural and political conditions. The formal unity of the booth, though composed of discrete paintings and neon elements, will impart the immersive experience of an installation, and will locate viewers powerfully in abstracted places from Patrick's Los Angeles - places decades old, some lost to gentrification, sites of long-standing inhabitation fading from view.

Patrick Martinez is at the vanguard of a movement of BIPOC artists making mixed media paintings in response to their lived environment(s) around East and South Central Los Angeles. Typical in Patrick's neighborhood are corner stores adorned with murals of various kinds, many containing references to Nahua or Maya mythological forms. Also common are security bars and home-based businesses featuring neon signage addressing motorists and passerby from available windows. Operating in a manner similar to collage, Patrick's landscape works locate viewers in a particular geographic place with a demonstrable ethnic identity and socio-economic position. These paintings are executed on wood panel and are painted and assembled in layers. There are several layers of clear figuration, each of which is painted over with house paint once complete. Patrick then uses a pressure washer to blast away the house paint, exposing the under-layers of figuration, resulting in the visual suggestion of aging, erosion, and the passage of time. The foundational layers of figuration will frequently display evidence of aerosol paint tags, with subsequent buffs of those tags which are later tagged again, imparting a sense of narrative to the places evoked in the paintings. Atop these multi-layered surfaces Patrick adds neon forms, signature ceramic elements, and found materials such as security bars and tarp signage to complete the compositions. The results are abstracted landscapes that evoke sites in Patrick's community and their respective timelines - the viewer sees the decades of wear in each surface and feels the vulnerability of each place to change and possible displacement.
